

Savas Beatie

Independent, scholarly, and a bit old fashioned

CHICAGO'S BATTERY BOYS

The Chicago Mercantile Battery in the Civil War's Western Theater

Richard Brady Williams

The Chicago Mercantile Battery was organized in 1862 by a group of prominent Chicago merchants. As part of Maj. Gen. John McClernand's 13th Corps, the battery participated in the long and arduous Vicksburg campaign. The artilleryists performed well everywhere they were tested, including Chickasaw Bluffs, Port Gibson, Champion Hill, Big Black River, and the siege against Vicksburg. Ancillary operations included the reduction of Arkansas Post, the capture of Jackson, and others. During the siege of Vicksburg on May 22, 1863, Captain Pat White and his "Battery Boys" took part in the bloody attack against the 2nd Texas Lunette, pushing a one-ton field piece up a ravine to fire point blank within the shadows cast by the enemy's fortifications. (White and five of his artilleryists would eventually receive the Medal of Honor for their valor that day.)

After Vicksburg fell, the Chicago battery was transferred to New Orleans for service under Maj. Gen. Nathaniel Banks, who was preparing an invasion along the Red River into Texas. At Sabine Crossroads (Mansfield) on April 8, 1864, the "Battery Boys" were overrun by the enemy and nearly wiped out. In addition to the killed and wounded, two dozen gunners were shipped off to a Southern prison. Letters from the battery broke the wall of silence Banks erected and alerted the country that disaster had befallen the Union army in Louisiana. Swift retribution against White's cannoners followed.

Richard Brady Williams' Chicago's Battery Boys: The Chicago Mercantile Battery in the Civil War's Western Theater sets forth in stunning detail the magnificent history of this long-overlooked artillery outfit. Based upon years of primary research and a wealth of archival documents, this study features more than 100 previously unpublished wartime letters, diaries, and other eyewitness reports that enrich our understanding of who these men were and what they endured for the cause of liberty and the Union. Williams skillfully weaves these contemporary accounts around a powerful narrative that will satisfy the most discriminating Civil War reader.

About the Author: Richard Brady Williams is a business executive in the biotechnology field. For almost a decade, Richard has been conducting research on the Chicago Mercantile Battery and collecting memorabilia from the unit. He lives in Chapel Hill, North Carolina.

*"Williams, thanks to his research and writing, has provided a masterful unit history about Chicago's Battery Boys."*

— Edwin C. Bearss, noted Civil War historian

Specifications

September 2005

ISBN 1-932714-06-5

Photos, illus., maps, appendices, biblio., index, HC, d.j., 636 pages.
Price: $39.95

Foreword by noted Civil War
historian Edwin C. Bearss;
Maps by George Skoch

Rights Available

English-language co-edition outside North America. Worldwide foreign language, foreign paper and foreign book club editions; serializations.

Book Trade Distribution

Casemate Publishing
2114 Darby Road, Second Floor
Havertown, PA 19083
610-853-9131 (phone)
610-853-9146 (fax)
casemate@casematepublishing.com

Individual Sales

SB Savas Beatie LLC
P.O. Box 4527
El Dorado Hills, CA 95762
916-941-6896
www.savasbeatie.com
E-mail: sales@savasbeatie.com